

Consideration for Preliminary Adoption of Amendments to 312 IAC 9 governing the hunting of ruffed grouse and wild turkeys.

Ruffed Grouse

The changes to the rule governing the hunting of ruffed grouse would reduce hunting on public lands (only) to 6 weeks. The season length on private lands would remain unchanged.

Currently, grouse hunting occurs across all or portions of 25 counties from October 1 to December 31 (13 weeks) with a 2 bird bag limit.

Extremely low grouse population levels and deteriorating habitat conditions with uncertain prospects for improvement raise concerns about hunting mortality on grouse populations, especially on public lands with unrestricted hunter access. Basically, any grouse taken after December 31 are considered additive mortality and are not likely to be replaced during that year's breeding season. The proposed rule change would not reduce private land opportunities, nor penalize those landowners who actively manage their woodlands to produce young forest habitats for ruffed grouse and provides an incentive to landowners, who enjoy grouse hunting, to more actively manage their timberlands. The shortened grouse season on public lands would overlap with the first part of the small game season and the peak migration flights of American woodcock, another game species often sought by grouse hunters.

Wild Turkeys

The proposed changes to the wild turkey rule would do the following:

- 1) Add 16 new counties in Indiana for the fall firearms season, including 7 in northern Indiana
- 2) Open all counties (statewide) for fall turkey archery season
- 3) Add 7 days to the early archery portion of the fall turkey season
- 4) Add a second (late) archery turkey season to coincide with the late deer archery season (they would run at the same time and have a hunter orange requirement)
- 5) Expand the fall turkey firearm season in the south for 7 more days (12 days total - includes 2 weekends).

The relatively low harvests, hunter participation, and hunter success under the current conservative fall season structure indicate that the hunting range and the days of hunting opportunity could be expanded for both archery and firearms (shotgun) portions of the turkey season. These changes to the fall season would not be likely to have much of an impact on spring harvest. The proposed fall turkey structure would still be considered conservative relative to other surrounding states and still demonstrates the DNR's commitment to emphasize spring over fall hunting opportunities as desired by turkey hunters in general. The extension of the archery hunting opportunities will likely have a negligible effect on overall fall harvests levels given the relatively low archery hunter success ($\leq 2\%$). The more conservative 5-day firearms season in the north for a few selected counties will allow for a 3-year assessment of fall firearm hunting in a region with relatively lower overall turkey population levels.

No changes to the spring season or bag limit are being proposed.

The Department of Natural Resources recommends preliminary adoption of the following amendments to 312 IAC 9:
